MAN ADMITS ROBBING 39 CHURCHES

IMPLICATE FOUR IN OHIO AND KENTUCKY PILLAGING CRIMES

Catholic Edifices Vic- tims Of Gang Is Learned

COVINGTON, Ky., June 25.—Denying participation in the pillage and robbery of thirty-nine Ohio and Kentucky churches, Clifford and Albert McArthur, and John and Perry Vogt, all of Bromley, Ky., were held under $5,000 bond each here today, when they were charged with complicity in church robberies in Kenton and Campbell County, Kentucky, churches, following the reported confession of Ray Marsden at Upper Sandusky, late Friday, in which authorities say the four men were implicated.

The case was continued to June 29. Clifford McArthur furnished bond. The others did not.

Marsden is held in the Wyandot County jail awaiting trial for robbing the Carey Shrine of Our Lady of Consolation, of a Sacred Image of the Blessed Virgin, and of attempting to obtain $200 for its return.

Detectives who arrested the four men upon Marsden's confession and allegations, Friday, went to a spot indicated by Marsden along the Licking River, and there in an abandoned automobile found a golden monstrance that had been stolen from St. Benedict Church, Covington, May 1.

The detectives declared that Marsden implicated Albert McArthur as the man who started a fire in St. Boniface Church, Ludlow, Ky., when that church was robbed several months ago.

Authorities here say that Marsden's confession, indicates a remarkable memory, and that, dates, places and robbery details in police reports, coincide with those mentioned in the confession they report he has made.

The list of churches contained in Marsden's confession the detectives reported, include: Independence, Ky.; Holy Angels Church; Hamilton, O.; St. Joseph Church; Ft. Mitchell, Ky.; Blessed Sacrament Church; Latonia, Ky.; Holy Cross Church; Catholic Church at Clinton, Ky.; Catholic Church at Sanford, Ky.; St. John's Church; Ft. Thomas, Ky.; St. Thomas Church; Newport, Ky.; St. Stephen's Church; Covington, Ky.; St. Benedict Church; and Dayton, Ky.; Sacred Heart Church.

Detectives here say that in one portion of Marsden's confession he told of his conspirators having borrowed a fire at a garage. The men, the detectives said, denied participation in the robbery, but admitted the borrowed tire incident.

WILE SAYS:

Counterfeiting
U. S. Protection
Raising Bills
Decreasing Here

By FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright 1927

WASHINGTON, June 25.—William H. Moran, veteran chief of the United States secret service, will arrive in Geneva this week as an unofficial observer at the conference on counterfeiting called by the League of Nations.

The purpose of the conference is to discuss international measures to suppress counterfeiting of currency all over the world.

Delegates, consisting of judicial and technical experts, will be on hand from many countries in both hemispheres.

The conference will assemble on June 23 and sit simultaneously with the three-power conference on naval limitation, convened at the instigation of President Coolidge. France is the prime mover in the effort to find ways and means of curbing the world-wide crime of manufacturing false money.

The United States, for several reasons, has a primary interest in bringing about co-related measures for coping with counterfeiting. In the first place, we are the only country on earth that has always held it incumbent upon ourselves to protect foreign currency in America as zealously as we safeguard our own.

Ambassador Hugh S. Gibson, who heads the American delegation at the Geneva conference, has been given positive instructions to reject any and all British demands for cruiser superiority.

The manner in which today's announcement was made indicated clearly that the United States stands willing to let the Geneva conference go by the boards rather than accept any modification of the 5-5 naval ratio as between this country and Great Britain.

Luncheon on the campus at 12 o'clock, noon, immediately followed the graduation exercises. In the afternoon, the closing commencement feature was the annual varsity-alumni baseball game, scheduled to begin at 3 o'clock.

SENTENCED TO LIFE IN FEDERAL PRISON AFTER CONVICTION

Warren Slayer Saved
From Death By Provision In Law

CLEVELAND, June 25.—Ernest Frederick, of Warren, O., today awaited in the county jail here, his transfer to the federal penitentiary at Atlanta, where he is to serve a life sentence, following his conviction in the United States district court late yesterday, on a charge of first degree murder.

Frederick shot and killed Walter Holcomb, Warren merchant, in the postoffice lobby at Warren, last February 28. The motive was assigned to alleged reports received by Frederick that Holcomb had been too friendly with his wife.

Jay Buchwalter, Warren, Frederick's attorney, announced after sentence had been pronounced that he would file proceedings in error and ask a new trial.

Federal law does not provide for a second degree murder charge, but a clause in the first degree statute states that the jury can convict the accused of first degree murder "without capital punishment."

Had the jury not made use of this provision, Frederick would have been sentenced to hang.

BROOM THROWN AT BOY BREAKS SKULL

Worried? No, Say Flyers' Wives

ROOSEVELT FIELD, MINEOLA, N. Y., June 25.—"I'm used to my husband taking chances and I'm not at all apprehensive about this flight across the Atlantic."

This expression from Mrs. Bert Acosta, in an interview today, is typical of the calm attitude of the wives of members of the Byrd expedition who are impatiently waiting to take off for Paris in the giant three-motored monoplane, America.

Mrs. Acosta, a small, dark-eyed woman, the mother of two boys, Bert, Jr., 4 years old, and Allyn Lee, 3 years old, told International News Service she certainly did not regard the forthcoming flight to Paris as the most dangerous adventure her strapping, black-haired husband has participated in.

"Why, I think the work he has been doing all along, making test flights in new planes is infinitely more dangerous," she said. "Every thing is mapped out on a scientific basis for the Paris flight."

Mrs. Acosta and her sons are stopping at the Garden City hotel where they will receive the radio reports from the America after the hop off.

Mrs. George O. Noville, the attractive wife of Lieut. Noville, flight engineer of the America, is also staying at the same hotel. Unlike Mrs. Acosta who has seen her husband take part in many flights and automobile speed races, she has not experienced the thrill of seeing her husband off on a dangerous mission. But she is fully as contained as Mrs. Acosta as the "zero hour" approaches.

"I won't faint," she said, smiling when she was reminded how Mrs. Charles Levine reacted when her husband took off for Europe.

Both Mrs. Acosta and Mrs. Noville expect to be present at the take off but they gave assurances that they would not be conspicuous. Neither plan a trip to Europe if their husbands arrive abroad successfully.

Mrs. Richard E. Byrd, wife of the commander of the expedition, is even more retiring. She has consistently declined to be interviewed or to comment in any way on the flight. She came to Garden City from Boston to be near her husband before he departs. The Byrds have three children.

The fourth member of the expedition, Lieut. Bert Balchen is unmarried. He has no wife or sweetheart to say goodbye to him, but he has a mother waiting for him in Oslo, Norway, when he gets to Europe.

When the flyers will hop off was still a matter of conjecture early today. There was a possibility of an improvement of weather conditions which would enable the America to start sooner than dawn Sunday, the hour at which Commander Byrd figured as the earliest starting time after his last conference with the weather bureau.

COMPANION IS HURT WHEN PLANE WRECKS DURING TAILSPIN

Child Prays That Student Recovers From Hurts

POTTSVILLE, Pa., June 25.—Unless internal injuries are discovered George T. Lambert, son of the owner of the Lambert Chemical Co., St. Louis, will be able to leave the local hospital in a day or two, his physicians announced today. Young Lambert was hurt and his cousin, James T. Walker, also of St. Louis, was killed yesterday, when their airplane crashed.

Walker, a passenger in the plane piloted by Lambert, recently came into an estate valued at $5,000,000.

Three words, "Goodbye 'Mal Carol,'" were found written in pencil on the inner cover of Walker's check book found in the plane after the crash. Lambert with tears streaming down his cheeks told physicians Walker saw that a crash was inevitable and he wrote this good bye to Malvern S. Clopton, his step-father and a girl he was acquainted with.

Walker's body will be taken to his home in St. Louis as soon as arrangements are completed.

he declared, the two youths were graduated from Princeton university on June 21, and were flying from Princeton to St. Louis when their plane crashed.

The two-seater biplane went into a tailspin when Lambert tried to make an emergency landing. It was wrecked and partly buried in mud. Walker was dragged from the plane unconscious and died enroute to a hospital. His left arm, face and head were crushed.

Lambert intended to fly as far as the Bellefonte, Pa., airfield yesterday afternoon, play golf at a nearby country club and continue the flight today. He purchased the ill-fated plane from a Philadelphia concern six months ago.

NEW YORK, June 25.—A little thirteen-year-old Brooklyn girl prayed today for the recovery of George T. Lambert, Princeton student who was seriously injured when his airplane crashed at Pottsville, Pa., resulting in the death of James T. Walker, his cousin and classmate and heir to a $5,000,000 fortune.

The girl is Lillian Chernow. She was released from a hospital only two days ago after receiving treatment for injuries sustained when the same airplane struck her on June 8, when Lambert was attempting to take off after being forced down by lack of fuel in a vacant lot in Brooklyn.

With a crowd of other children, Lillian was watching Lambert's plane get under way, when it suddenly veered sideways, the wing striking the little girl just before the machine rose.

"I am very sorry to hear he has been hurt," Lillian said when she heard of the accident. "He came to the hospital to see me and many times sent me flowers and candy. Tell him I am praying for him."

"He promised to take me for a ride some day in his airplane. I am waiting for that ride."

PRINCETON, N. J., June 25.—George T. Lambert's airplane, a familiar dot in the sky in the environs of Princeton university, would have been banned by Dean Christian Gauss next week as an undergraduate hazard, had it not crashed to earth at Pottsville, Pa., yesterday.

One check from today, a university order prohibiting the use of automobiles by students becomes effective. When Lambert brought his plane to Princeton some weeks ago, Dean Gauss decided to amend his order to forbid the use of planes by students also.

WHITE CITY WIPED OUT BY FLAMES

CHICAGO, June 25.—White City, Chicago's historic southside amusement park, was practically wiped out by fire early today. The amusement company, estimated the loss at $250,000. The blaze started near the illuminated central tower, and before the first fire apparatus had arrived the structure was a blazing torch. It created a stirring scene as it crashed to the ground. The tower was the principal loss.

LANSING, Kas., June 25.—The mutiny of 328 convict coal miners, who had barricaded themselves in the Kansas Penitentiary coal mine here, was at an end today and the rebel miners are little the worse for their experience, despite the seventy-seven hour siege underground.

The mutiny ended last night after a fierce battle among the miners, fifty of them holding out for a continuation of the "strike."

The fifty "die-hard" were overpowered by the fellow convicts and brought to the surface where the entire troop was taken in charge by guards.

GIBSON INDICATES PROPOSALS WILL BE GIVEN ATTENTION

Japanese Program Would Seem To Favor Britain

GENEVA, June 25.—While Great Britain has refused to withdraw her proposals for the reduction of capital ship tonnage, the United States and Japan have both declared these suggestions to be outside the scope of the present disarmament conference.

However, Hugh Gibson, chief American delegate, made a statement to the press today, indicating that the capital ship proposals of Great Britain would be discussed in the present conference.

"The British proposals have been referred to Washington and we are awaiting instructions," Gibson's statement immediately led to rumors that a private agreement had been reached that the British proposals would be discussed in the conference, with an understanding that after discussion they would be withdrawn. These rumors were without confirmation from either the American or British delegations.

Experts who have studied the Japanese proposals announced today that if their program were carried out the actual strength of navies would be as follows: submarines, Japan, 5.15; United States, 5; Great Britain, 2.85; cruisers and destroyers combined, Great Britain, 6.14; United States, 5; Japan, 3.24. This means that the tonnage ratio for cruisers, destroyers and submarines combined would be, Great Britain, 5.77; United States, 5; Japan, 3.49.

Experts of the three delegations were in session during the day considering technical questions regarding cruiser, destroyer and submarine limitation.

The conference adjourned for the week-end at 1 o'clock this afternoon although the experts of each delegation are continuing their work individually.

BIBLE THOUGHT

GOD'S BENEFITS—Blessed be the Lord, who daily beareth our burden, Even the God who is our salvation. Psalm 68:19.

GROWING UP MENTALLY

Chancellor Brown of New York university told his graduating class a few days ago that there is in this virile country a certain childish streak. He found such a tendency in the impatience of the age, in the demand for thrills, and in the dislike for self-restraint.

The American people will strongly deny that they are childish. Yet their most thoughtful observers will have to admit the existence of traits in which many grown up people act very much like children.

We all know young men who are anxious for quick results right off now. They do not like the idea of beginning at the bottom and working their way up by gradual industry. They want to accomplish results by sensational stunts, or daring speculations. They cherish wild schemes of how they can get rich right off quick.

Then we know all about the demand for thrills. How many of us can be content to drive automobiles at a moderate rate, but we must tear through the streets as if we were running to a fire. How we demand plays and films and stories of sensational character, far removed from the experiences of ordinary life. How the simpler pleasures seem dull and prosaic.

Then we know all about the dislike of self-restraint, and how children dislike to obey parental commands, and how many adults rebel at the laws of the state. All these manifestations are very like the ways of children, who find difficulty in adjusting themselves to those orderly and disciplined methods by which society makes progress.

Childishness is overcome by thought and observation of life. The people who read good newspapers, magazines and books, learn the real facts about life, and how poorly childish ideas work out in practice. Those who have developed the reading habit should know too much about actual affairs to be influenced by childish reasoning.

READY TO PLEASE VOTERS

The rapid reduction of the national debt keeps raising the question what can be done to improve the financial results of states, cities and towns, and get their debts and taxes down?

One thing that would help a lot, would be if the ordinary run of people would take more interest in their state and local affairs. If the people were discussing these affairs wherever they meet, and debating how taxes could be reduced and the service of public departments improved, if legislators and councilmen were constantly being asked about these results, the result would be to promote economical and efficient government.

The people get as good a government as they demand. If they neglect public affairs, public work will often be done in a wasteful way. If they take an interest in these affairs, they get improved results here in Ohio and everywhere else.

The Way of the World

PLOUGHING NIGHT AND DAY

Illinois farmers—some of them—have equipped their tractors with spot lights and are ploughing all night. Heavy rains have delayed planting nearly a month. There is tireless effort to put the ground in condition. Don't worry about the farmer's boy moving to the big city. There is more farm production than ever. That is the contribution of machinery to farm labor. And machinery is the contribution of science to this amazing industrial civilization.

NOT GOING TO THE DOGS

"Despite the opinion of the pessimists, both inside and outside the church, there are no indications that Englishmen or Americans are going to the dogs."

So say the Bishop of London, back home after giving the United States the once-over. The bishop speaks well. Never has there been more doubt in the business of theology. Perhaps there has never been more unbelief or more discouragement. But never before have there been so many people willing to bear the pain of thinking or trying to think. So long as we are TRYING TO GET SOMEWHERE, there is human progress, whether we go fast or slow.

THINKING HURTS

Speaking of thinking, it's a hard process. Few can stand it. Few even try. George Barton Cutton, president of Colgate university, tells us not to worry because people don't think very much. It's the newest and the most difficult of the arts. Nobody can keep it up very long. It hurts. We have to be patient with everybody—including ourselves.

A SIXTH SENSE

THERE is no chart beneath the sun To tell when turkey's really done That fact the finished cook can tell Just by a something in the smell!

Thermometers aren't necessary For frosting, if a cook is wary; The boiling syrup, she has found, When ready, makes a certain sound!

No oven's ever twice the same. A pastry expert worth the name Must with her cakes and pies be able To disregard the timing-table.

A scientific cook's at sea Without her rule and recipe. It's no use talking—Providence Provides good cooks with that sixth sense!

Just Starting To Get Acquainted

KELLYGRAMS by FRED C. KELLY

THE UNFLATTERING LAW OF AVERAGES

If you throw a coin into the air 100 times the chances are that heads will turn up about fifty times.

Thus, while we can't predict what one coin will do at one particular moment, we can tell with considerable accuracy what a large number will do. This is the law of averages.

Now, this little law of averages applies almost as well to human beings as to inanimate objects. If each of us did his own thinking, this would scarcely be possible, but since most of us just follow the crowd, our future behavior is easily predicted by any one who knows what we have done in the past.

Insurance companies know, with uncanny accuracy, just about how many men will overeat, or fall, or take enough exercise, and die sooner or later. Likewise, they know how many will die from not eating enough.

In the restaurant of a famous department store in an eastern city, the manager knows exactly how much food of each kind to prepare, because he has figures at hand to show the averages in the past. He knows from previous experience how many people are likely to eat luncheon in the store restaurant on a certain day of the week, and he knows that only one person out of every hundred will order shellfish. A trifle more than one out of every five is reasonably sure to desire some kind of salad. Here are the percentages of customers that order various other items:

Relishes	1.7
Soups	6.7
Fish	5.2
Boiled meats	2.2
Entrées (made dishes)	5.0
Roasts	5.6
Vegetables	7.4
Sandwiches	6.2
Pies, cakes and puddings	14.4
Ice Cream	14.4
Cheese, crackers and beverages	30.5

Club luncheons (75c)	32.5

MAKING MODERN MENUS

Mrs. Jones—"If there are any prizes being offered for the most unique recipe on record, I claim the reward."

Mrs. Brown—"What have you discovered now?"

Mrs. Jones—"This, a recipe for ginger ale salad, and I'll bet it's worth trying too."

GINGER ALE SALAD
Two tablespoons gelatin, half cup water, one cup boiling water one and a half cups ginger ale, half cup sugar, juice of one lemon, two cups fruit, cut fine, half cup nuts, chopped.
Soften gelatin cold water five minutes, dissolve in boiling water. Add ginger ale, lemon juice and sugar. Set aside to cool. When beginning to thicken, add fruit and turn into fancy molds. Serve on lettuce and garnish with dressing.

ing records of food eaten on different days, under various conditions of weather and temperature and general business, it would be possible to lay down figures so definite that the chef could look at the sky, the calendar, the thermometer and the newspaper, and cook exactly enough, but no more than enough.

It is not especially flattering to us humans that our doings may be almost as easily predicted as those of sheep. But it is a great convenience to organized business.

If no two of us did the same thing, and there was no telling what anybody would do from day to day, half of the business enterprises in the country would go bankrupt.

How to Achieve Beauty
SUMMER MAKE-UP
Today, in concluding my series of articles on ways and means of safeguarding your complexion from the deteriorating effects of sun and wind, I want to say a few words on the character of the make-up you should adopt at this season.

You should be careful to consider your complexion in the summer when applying your make-up and remember that instead of soft hangings, shaded lights and velvet carpets, you have to fit into the unadorned breadth of summer beaches, the broad expanse of green fields and long, white paths. The light, transparent fabrics and the dainty colorings of summer clothes demand the complement of a natural complexion, and not one that distinctly shows an extreme style of make-up.

Therefore, during the summer season you should adopt the darker shades of powder because they give a more natural effect. If necessary, blend two or three different shades of powder until you strike a color that blends with the natural coloring of the skin.

Your rouges, for both lips and cheeks, should also be more subtle, not as bright as during the social season. In other words, the whole effect should be toned down so as to correspond with the lightness, gaiety and natural beauty of the outdoors, where so much of one's time is spent.

And of course before applying one's summer make-up, the cleansing of the skin, as well as the bracing and toning and the application of the right sort of a foundation cream. This will depend on the particular type of one's skin, as well as the extent to which the face, neck and arms will be exposed to the sun.

Many Minds SIGNIFICANT SAYINGS OF THE DAY

"No one who is acquainted with history who observes what is all about us, can fail to cherish the hope that we are entering on a wonderful future. It has been said that the war was fought to make the world an abode fit for heroes. I want to see our own country the first to make that expectation a reality."—President Coolidge.

"If there were need of it between the two great democracies (France and the United States), in order to give high testimony of their desire for peace and to furnish a solemn example to other people, France would be willing to enter into an agreement with America mutually outlawing war."—M. Briand, French foreign minister.

Keeping HEALTHY by Dr. A.F. Currier

LEUKOPLAKIA

Occasionally people have written to me and asked the meaning of white patches or sores appearing upon the tongue and giving them much discomfort.

Now there are several diseases which have these sores on the tongue as one of their symptoms.

These are the so-called cancerous sores which come so often with certain forms of indigestion, sprue, psoriasis, skin lesions, etc. They all look so much alike that it is often difficult to distinguish one from another. The sores which I refer to are white, roundish or irregular patches but slightly elevated above the surface which appear for a while, then disappear, and then appear again. They may be in all parts of the mouth, but are particularly noticeable on the top of the tongue.

I have never happened to see but one real case of this kind and that was in the mouth of an eminent physician giving him much trouble and annoyance for years before his death. These sores may be quite painful, even when not irritated by acids, salt, etc., but their chief importance consists in the fact that they may be the precursors of cancer of the tongue. It is therefore very important that they should not be neglected. They are produced by prolonged irritation of one kind and another, the irritation from the constant use of tobacco, clay pipes, particularly when they are rough and dirty, irregular and jagged teeth, ill-fitting teeth plates, and many other sources of irritation which may be in the mouth.

The thing to do is to try and get rid of them when they first appear, and remove the cause which has produced them. A strong solution of iodine of potash or of sulphate of copper, frequently applied, is said to be effective in removing them, also an ointment of salicylic acid of moderate strength, or an application of X-rays. I have not observed any recommendation of the use of carboric acid snow, but should think it would be worthy of a trial, and do not see how it could do any harm. The tendency to develop into cancer is the principal thing which is to be feared and which gives the sores their great importance. They should therefore, be dealt with promptly and thoroughly when they first make their appearance.

I expected to see a ferocious-looking buccaneer, with a terrible brow

While I was down there my dad told me one night that a former "bad man" was coming to dinner. He was just like Tom Mix. When they get home, drunk or sober, they have to take the "lariat" off their saddle horns and put them back on the well buckets.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

F. A. B.—Have a sharp pain under the left shoulder blade all the time, and am unable to find anybody who knows what causes it. What is the cause and what will cure it?

Answer.—Isn't this rather too much of a conundrum? I assume that you have been examined by doctors, who were unable to find the cause, even after inspection and examination. How can I do anything but guess what the trouble may be without seeing you or knowing anything of the history of the case? However, let me guess muscular rheumatism, and suggest that you try the use of salicylate of soda in five-grain doses after each meal. I don't think it will do you any harm, and it may possibly give you relief.

C. F. M.—Am 37, my tongue is constantly covered with a yellow coating, my breath is offensive and I have had a succession of boils during the winter. Please tell me what might improve my condition. My appetite appears to be good.

Answer.—Perhaps you are eating too much, and it is quite certain that you are eating what does not digest properly. Take castor oil every night before retiring, and drink a glass of hot water very slowly before each meal. Also let your diet consist chiefly of fruit and vegetables for a few weeks.

Little Old New York

NEW YORK, June 25.—I met a woman yesterday who is a successful writer of western stories. She lives in the east forties. She is a native of Boston and a graduate of an eastern college. When I asked her how she gathered material for her tales of cowboys and the plains, she told me that she had once made a trip to the Pacific coast on the Overland Limited. Perhaps that explains why her fiction is successful. If she knew cowboys as they really are, she would never be able to amek them so romantic and glamorous. A cowboy leads as monotonous a life as any officer in the northwest mounted police, a service that has also been romanticized out of all reason.

Not so long ago I was on a visit to the state in which I grew up as a youth, Oklahoma. I knew a lot of cowboys in my early days. Few of them ever owned a pair of chaps, and those who did never wore them at work, but kept them to show off in at county fairs. They wore boots and blue-jeans and flannel shirts, bought from a mail order house.

When I was down in Oklahoma the last time, the movies had made the cowhands self-conscious. Most of the grazing lands had been either divided up into farms or staked out as oil leases. There were not any cowboys, really, but farm hands. But most of them had bought sombreroes and chaps from Montgomery and Ward.

They dress up on Saturday nights with their salaries in their pockets, take the ropes off the well buckets and coil them around their saddle horns, drink a pint or so of white mule, ride into town and see a movie, and ride back along the country roads lickety-split—yelling, "Whoopee! I'm a hell-cat and this is my night ter howl! Whoopee!" and imagine they are just like Tom Mix.

While I was down there my dad told me one night that a former "bad man" was coming to dinner. He was just like Tom Mix. When they get home, drunk or sober, they have to take the "lariat" off their saddle horns and put them back on the well buckets.

and a bushy mustache, six feet tall at least. About 6 o'clock in the evening a swanky roadster drove up to the house. In it I saw at first only a large, bulbous woman at the wheel. Then I saw a fat baby, and then behind the baby, nestled far down in the seat, I saw a little man.

They got out of the car, this tiny little fellow, mild and innocent-looking as could be, holding a baby almost as large as he was, with his wife who was about three times his size. We were introduced. It was the "bad man." I was disillusioned, and disappointed. I was further disillusioned a little later on when he got deathly sick on a drink or two of apple-jack.

The writers of western stories, mystery tales and detective fiction, form a curious literary clan in New York. There is one publishing house, devoted exclusively to fiction of this sort, that makes a net profit of over $10,000,000 a year. It publishes several cheap magazines sold on the newsstands throughout the world. And it publishes paper backed books to be sold at a quarter apiece.

The writers for this publishing house are all staff writers on a weekly salary, under contract to turn out so many thousand words a week. They have desks in the publishing house and punch the clock like manual laborers. They are unknown writers, never heard of among the literary cliques; but they are industrious and capable men and women, with a distinct facility in turning out reams of copy.

Quantity production is a necessary factor in the success of such hack writers. I know one hack writer, adept in turning out ten or twenty thousand words of fiction a week, whose income last year was $80,000. In addition to his hack work, he turns out quite a good deal of fiction of good literary quality. His name is H. Bedford Jones. At present he is living in Paris.

Fulton Oursler is another one of those dynamos of energy, who writes both good stuff and hack stuff, almost like turning out a faucet. He edits a string of publications that sell into the millions. He dictates fiction serials which he signs by a pseudonym. And while doing all this work, he has found time to write two novels that were accorded warm praise from reviewers, and one play, "The Spider," which is a current hit on Broadway.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED:

Philip Wynne Tracy IV has had a childish engagement with Natalie Jones. Becoming interested in Lyra Hilliard, an old friend of his mother's, he falls in love with her. Natalie, overhearing him making love to Lyra, breaks her engagement. The whole affair, however, sinks into nothingness because America enters the World war.

Phil is one of the first to enlist. Just before leaving for France, Phil meets Natalie again and they plan to be married. The immediate departure of the troops, however, prevents this. Phil's regiment is sent to the front soon after arriving in France. He is wounded, receiving the croix de guerre.

After the armistice Phil is awarded a scholarship in a French university, and while in Paris he comes face to face with his mother, who has come to France to hunt him. Major Aukland, who is devoted to Anne Tracy, accompanies her. In talking things over, Mrs. Tracy learns that Phil intends to marry Lyra, a rich French divorcee. She refuses to give her consent to the marriage.

Phil compromises with his mother. If she will refuse Major Aukland's proposal of marriage, he will give up Lyra for two years. She agrees and Phil goes to tell Pat. She instinctively knows something is wrong and tells him they will never marry. Here the story further unfolds—

CHAPTER LI

OFF TO AMERICA

FOR the next few days Philip's nerves, as well as his mother's, were rather jumpy. Philip was all the time thinking that Pat would either telegraph or telephone. With a man's usual egotism, he could not think that she would let him go without at least one more goodbye. Mrs. Tracy had the same feeling, and every time the telephone rang she rushed over to it. Never before had John Aukland left her without a lingering farewell.

However, at the end of the week she saw in one of the Paris papers that Major Aukland had gone to Turkey with the Near East expedition, and a friend told Philip one evening that he had seen Pat leaving the station for Switzerland, consequently they both became calmer, if not happier.

Neither mother nor son referred in any way to the absence of Pat or John Aukland in their conversation, when they were perhaps more in each other's thoughts than at any time than any one or anything else. Philip had to leave Paris for two or three days to go and get his discharge papers. During that time his mother finished up the shopping and so kept herself too busy to think much about anything.

All the time, however, she kept asking herself if again she had made a mistake, for Anne Tracy had come to see that her interference between Phil and Natalie had been a great error of judgment.

SHE felt better when on the Fourth of July they stood on the Rue de Rivoli and cheered the American troops as they marched up that historical street, escorted by the crack regiments of England, Belgium, Italy, Canada and Australia.

Phil lifted his mother high in the air and said, with more pride and enthusiasm than she had heard him express since she had met him abroad: "We're proud we're Americans, aren't we, young lady, and we're glad we're going home."

"Yes, Phil, I shall be so glad to get home that it seems to me now I shall never want to go away again. Oh, I have so many plans for both of us."

"Don't talk of plans, Mother. They make me miserable. What can you plan for such a poor stick as I am?" Anne Huntington Tracy looked at her boy. He was thin and she saw lines on his face that ought not to have been there until he was at least 30, and the tears came to her eyes. Would he ever get back his youthful spirits again?

It was not until the 14th of August that mother and son found themselves at Le Havre, embarking for America. They were both of them leaving many happy days and many very terrible days behind, but after all, that is only what makes up life.

Just as the boat edged out from the pier, Mrs. Tracy felt her arm clutched by her son. She raised her eyes to his face. He was not looking at her. He was looking over the crowd on the dock. Following his gaze, she saw Pat's face turned up to them. Anne felt a little guilty, for Pat's eyes were very sad and the tears were streaming down her cheeks.

Phil took off his hat and bowed formally. His mother thought he seemed almost glad that the parting was just as it was. Neither mother nor son mentioned it to the other afterward. The episode was apparently closed.

Philip was a little ashamed, for since that afternoon on the Bois he had never tried to see Pat again. He had not even written to tell her when he was sailing. His mother was perfectly willing, now they were leaving France, not to mention Phil's French sweetheart's name to him. He noticed, as he saw her on the pier, that there had been times when he had forgotten her.

Soon they both turned away from the land and faced across the sea toward America. Both were leaving the past two years behind them. Philip characteristically was saying to himself that he had been jilted, for him to do but to take it as gracefully as possible. He did not realize that he was accepting it almost too gracefully.

FUN FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY

The Rovin' Ritzies By Flo Frederick

Marty says it isn't right. To give them such a fright! "What in the world could have happened to the twins?" Marty asked himself this over and over again as he hurried along through the woods with Patsy on one side and Betty Ann on the other.

It had been Patsy who had first noticed that the twins had disappeared. They were all attending the Methodist Sunday school picnic and taking part in all kinds of games and stunts and so it wasn't until late in the afternoon that the absence of the twins had been noticed.

"I guess they felt sort of like strangers and just wandered off some place," suggested Marty, trying to lighten the worries of the girls. The twins weren't members of the Methodist Sunday school, but had been invited by their Ritzie friends and so, of course, they weren't so well acquainted with this group of boys and girls.

"Why, Tag was the one that suggested the chariot race right at the start," said Patsy. "He didn't seem very timid, then. You know, Marty as well as I, that the twins never have any trouble getting acquainted."

Marty had to admit that she was right. There was no doubt this seemed worse than anything that had ever happened before.

"What is that?" asked Patsy, as she pointed to a bit of cloth tied to a tree, a yard or so from the beaten path.

"It's a signal all right," said Marty, as he examined the bit of cloth. "And it's recently been tied because it's not a bit dirty. We're on the trail but what it's all about I can't imagine."

Bits of cloth were found at regular intervals from then on and the three Ritzies eagerly followed the zig-zag trail that they made. At length they came to a steep cliff and here the trail seemed to disappear altogether. They followed the cliff, hoping to come to another signal, but instead suddenly found themselves at the mouth of a small cave.

They had summoned up courage to peer into the cave and Marty had taken a step forward when out jumped Rag from the darkness of the cave, giving them such a fright that all three were knocked speechless.

"Of course we expected to find you, but not so suddenly," stammered Marty. "Why did you run off like this? You've given us an awful fright."

Rag, who at first seemed to think about it, something had happened to the twins and the more he thought about the stories he had heard about the old mill being haunted, the more frightened he became.

They had come to a narrow path which seemed to have been recently traveled and they followed it like bloodhounds on the scent. All of a sudden Marty stopped with a cry of delight. On a nearby tree, a freshly carved letter R stood out as clearly as could be.

The three Ritzies viewed this new with surprise and wonderment. Patsy was inclined to think that the twins were up to some kind of a trick, perhaps blazing a Ritzie trail or something of the kind. Marty, who couldn't keep his mind off the fact that the old mill was haunted, couldn't help but think that the twins were in danger.

Betty Ann, wide-eyed with fright, was too upset to offer a suggestion. The twins were always scaring her with their antics and it quite a joke, suddenly became more serious as he asked a most unexpected question. "Have you seen Tag?"

"Why, no," answered Marty. "Isn't he here? We thought you were together."

Rag looked quite worried at this and he hurried on to explain. "You see it was like this. Tag and I got tired of playing potato races and running potato races and so we started off through the woods. I got to thinking about trails and made a bet that Tag couldn't follow a trail of mine. He took me up on it and gave me a 15-minute start. I made what I thought was a pretty easy trail and have been waiting for him in this cave. I was beginning to be worried just before you folks arrived, for it has been almost an hour."

Rag's explanation didn't calm the fears of Marty and the girls. That only one of the twins had been found only added to the mystery of the thing. What had happened to Tag and why couldn't he follow the trail?

CHRYSLER FAVORED BY PIONEER MAKER

Twenty-nine years ago Alexander Winton, who became famous later as a manufacturer of fine cars, shipped the first automobile sold in America from his modest little factory in Cleveland, Ohio. Except motor and chassis, it lacked practically everything the modern motor car possesses.

Yet it was No. 1 of 35,000,000 or more motor vehicles that have been made since and sold to people in every walk of life.

Just a few days ago, Alexander Winton, still hale, hearty and recently remarried, and still actively interested in the automotive industry, bought himself an automobile.

Walter F. Wright, distributor of Chrysler in the Cleveland territory, rather proudly revealed the fact with Winton's permission.

Winton, called by some the father of the automobile industry and for years head of a concern that manufactured a high class motor car bearing his name, chose his new car from among four Chrysler models. His selection was one of the new Imperial "50" four-passenger coupes, a luxurious personal car.

OLDSMOBILE CUTS PRICES ON MODELS

The American public appreciates exceptional value in automobiles. This is proven by the reception accorded the announcement last week that Oldsmobile had reduced prices and added to equipment, thus passing on to the consumer these savings which have been made possible by new and improved methods of production.

Reports from all sections of the country, factory officials state, reflect a widespread and increasing demand for Oldsmobiles. The reaction of the public to the new low prices is taken as a clear indication that the motoring public is not only cognizant of automobile value but is seeking it today as never before.

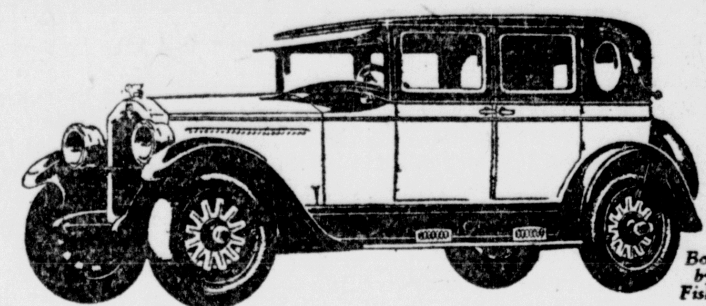

The reductions made by Oldsmobile average approximately $100 for all models, although in individual cases the drop in price is as much as $115. The price range is from $875 for the two-door sedan with front and rear bumpers to $1075 for deluxe landau.

President Arthur E. Morgan Speaks To First Class To Complete College Course Under The "Antioch Plan"

President Arthur E. Morgan was the principal speaker at the annual Antioch College commencement exercises held on the campus Saturday morning, when fifty-two undergraduates, comprising the first class to complete the six-year course of study outlined by President Morgan in 1921, received their degrees.

The commencement program opened with music by the Holstein quartet of Dayton, and continued as follows:

Hymn, "Joy to the World," sung by the audience; prayer by Dr. Lincoln R. Gibbs, former member of the faculty, now with the University of Miami, Miami, Fla.; address by President Morgan; music, "Andante Opus 70 No. 2" (Haydn); "The Mill" (Raff-Bachon); play by the Holstein quartet; conferring of degrees by Dean Philip C. Nash; Antioch hymn, sung by audience, and the benediction.

The list of churches contained in Marsden's confession the detectives reported, include: Independence, Ky., Holy Angels Church; Hamilton, O., St. Joseph Church; Ft. Mitchell, Ky., Blessed Sacrament Church; Lexington, Ky., Holy Cross Church; Catholic Church at Clinton, Ky.; Catholic Church at Sanfordtown, Ky.; Covington, Ky., St. John's Church; Ft. Thomas, Ky., St. Thomas Church; Newport Ky., St. Stephen's Church; Covington, Ky., St. Benedict Church; Dayton, Ky., Sacred Heart Church.

Detectives here say that in one portion of Marsden's confession he told of his conspirators having borrowed a tire at a garage. The men, the detectives said, denied participation in the robbery, but admitted the borrowed tire incident.

UPPER SANDUSKY, O., June 25.—Authorities of Ohio and Kentucky today are checking the confession of Ray Marsden, 41, alias Ray Dean Flint, Mich., who confessed Friday that he and four companions of Bromley, Ky., had robbed and burned thirty-nine churches in Ohio and Kentucky, according to local police. Marsden has been under arrest here since May 20, charged with robbing the Carey Shrine of Our Lady of Consolation of the sacred image. This image is credited with having worked many cures and is visited annually by thousands.

Although Marsden has confessed to this campaign of pillage and arson, he pleaded not guilty to the Carey charge, and will be tried June 30, on charges of robbery and blackmail.

Wyandot County officials charge Marsden stole the image at Carey, and then attempted to extort $200 from the Rev. Fish for its return. He was arrested, it is alleged, when he sent a boy to the priest's residence to collect the money.

The United States, for several reasons, has a primary interest in bringing about co-related means for coping with counterfeiters. In the first place, we are the only country on earth that has always held it incumbent upon ourselves to protect foreign currency in America as zealously as we safeguard our own. The state department is assenting to this view, and an American unofficial observer at Geneva said:

"As long ago as 1887, the Supreme Court of the United States declared that the obligation of one nation to punish those who, within its own jurisdiction, counterfeit the money of another nation has long been recognized as a right secured by the law of nations to a nation or its people."

Other countries have not taken the American view, nor is there any other government except that of the United States, which maintains a separate and distinct branch for the safeguarding of national currency—including both money and bonds. No everybody knows that the fundamental function of a government is to protect its citizens.

Warren Slayer Saved From Death By Provision In Law

CLEVELAND, June 25.—Ernest Frederick, of Warren, O., today awaited in the county jail here, his transfer to the federal penitentiary at Atlanta, where he is to serve a life sentence, following his conviction in the United States district court late yesterday, on a charge of first degree murder.

Frederick shot and killed Walter Holcomb, Warren merchant, in the postoffice lobby at Warren, last February 28. The motive was assigned to alleged reports received by Frederick that Holcomb had been too friendly with his wife.

Jay Buchwalter, Warren, Frederick's attorney, announced after sentence had been pronounced that he would file proceedings in error and ask a new trial.

Federal law does not provide for a second degree murder charge, but a clause in the first degree statute states that the jury can convict the accused of first degree murder if it thought capital punishment.

Had the jury not made use of this provision, Frederick would have been sentenced to hang.

Worried? No, Say Flyers' Wives

ROOSEVELT FIELD, MINEOLA, N. Y., June 25.—"I'm used to my husband taking chances and I'm not at all apprehensive about this flight across the Atlantic."

This expression from Mrs. Bert Acosta, in an interview today, is typical of the calm attitude of the wives of members of the Byrd expedition who are impatiently waiting to take off for Paris in the giant three-motored monoplane, America.

Mrs. Acosta, a small, dark-eyed woman, the mother of two boys, Bert, Jr., 4 years old, and Allyn, 3 years old, told International News Service she certainly did not regard the forthcoming flight to Paris as the most dangerous adventure her strapping, blackhaired husband has participated in.

"Why, I think the work he has been doing all alone, making test flights in new planes is infinitely more dangerous," she said. "Everything is mapped out on a scientific basis for the Paris flight."

Mrs. Acosta and her sons are staying at the Garden City hotel where they will receive the radio reports from the America after the hop off.

Mrs. George O. Noville, the attractive wife of Lieut. Noville, flight engineer of the America, is also staying at the same hotel. Unlike Mrs. Acosta who has seen her husband take part in many flights and automobile speed races, she has not experienced the thrill of seeing her husband off on a dangerous mission. But she is fully as content as Mrs. Acosta as the "zero hour" approaches.

"I won't faint," she said, smilingly when she was reminded how her husband took off for Europe.

Both Mrs. Acosta and Mrs. Noville expect to be present at the take off but they gave assurances that they would not be conspicuous. Neither plan a trip to Europe if their husbands arrive abroad successfully.

Mrs. Richard E. Byrd, wife of the commander of the expedition, is even more retiring. She has consistently declined to be interviewed or to comment in any way on the flight. She came to Garden City from Boston to be near her husband before he departs. The Byrds have three children.

The fourth member of the expedition, Lieut. Bernt Balchen is unmarried. He has no wife or sweetheart to say goodbye to him, but he has a mother waiting for him in Oslo, Norway, when he gets to Europe.

When the flyers will hop off was still a matter of conjecture early today. There was a possibility of an improvement of weather conditions which would enable the America to start sooner than dawn Sunday, the hour at which Commander Byrd figured as the earliest starting time after his last conference with the weather bureau.

Walker, passenger in the plane piloted by Lambert, recently came into an estate valued at $5,000,000.

Warren Slayer Saved From Death By Provision In Law

CLEVELAND, June 25.—Ernest Frederick, of Warren, O., today awaited in the county jail here, his transfer to the federal penitentiary at Atlanta, where he is to serve a life sentence, following his conviction in the United States district court late yesterday, on a charge of first degree murder.

Frederick shot and killed Walter Holcomb, Warren merchant, in the postoffice lobby at Warren, last February 28. The motive was assigned to alleged reports received by Frederick that Holcomb had been too friendly with his wife.

Jay Buchwalter, Warren, Frederick's attorney, announced after sentence had been pronounced that he would file proceedings in error and ask a new trial.

Federal law does not provide for a second degree murder charge, but a clause in the first degree statute states that the jury can convict the accused of first degree murder if it thought capital punishment.

Had the jury not made use of this provision, Frederick would have been sentenced to hang.

GIBSON INDICATES PROPOSALS WILL BE GIVEN ATTENTION

Japanese Program Would Seem To Favor Britain

GENEVA, June 25.—While Great Britain has refused to withdraw her proposals for the reduction of capital ship tonnage, the United States and Japan have both declared these suggestions to be outside the scope of the present disarmament conference.

However, Hugh Gibson, chief American delegate, made a statement to the press today, indicating that the capital ship proposals of Great Britain would be discussed in the present conference.

"No one wants to deny Great Britain the right to discuss capital ships here," said Gibson. "How far we Americans will discuss capital ships or whether we will only state our position remains to be seen."

"The British proposals have been referred to Washington and we are awaiting instructions," Gibson's statement immediately led to rumors that a private agreement had been reached that the British proposals would be discussed in the conference, with an understanding that after discussion they would be withdrawn.

These rumors were without confirmation from either the American or British delegations.

Experts who have studied the Japanese proposals announced today that if their program were carried out the actual strength of navies would be as follows: submarines, Japan, 515; United States, 5; Great Britain, 285; cruisers and destroyers combined, Great Britain, 614; United States, 5; Japan, 324. This means that the tonnage ratio for cruisers, destroyers and submarines combined would be: Great Britain, 5.77; United States, 5; Japan, 3.49.

Experts of the three delegations were in session during the day considering technical questions regarding cruiser, destroyer and submarine limitation.

The conference adjourned for the week-end at 1 o'clock this afternoon although the experts of each delegation are continuing their work individually.

The men had not suffered from their self-imposed incarceration since Tuesday noon.

NEW YORK, June 25.—A little thirteen-year-old Brooklyn girl prayed today for the recovery of George L. Lambert, Princeton student who was seriously injured when his airplane crashed at Pottsville, Pa., resulting in the death of James T. Walker, his cousin and classmate and heir to a $5,000,000 fortune.

The girl is Lillian Chernow. She was released from a hospital only two days ago after receiving treatment for injuries sustained when the same airplane struck her on June 8, when Lambert was attempting to take off after being forced down by lack of fuel in a vacant lot in Brooklyn.

With a crowd of other children, Lillian was watching Lambert's plane get under way, when it suddenly veered sideways, the wing striking the little girl just before the machine rose.

"I am very sorry to hear he has been hurt," Lillian said when she heard of the accident. "He came to the hospital to see me and many times sent me flowers and candy. Tell him I am praying for him."

"He promised to take me for a ride some day in his airplane. I am waiting for that ride."

PRINCETON, N. J., June 25.—George T. Lambert's airplane, a familiar dot in the sky in the environs of Princeton university, would have been banned by Dean Christian Gauss next week as an undergraduate hazard, had it not crashed to earth at Pottsville, Pa., yesterday.

One week from today, a university order prohibiting the use of automobiles by students becomes effective. When Lambert brought his plans to Princeton some weeks ago, Dean Gauss decided to amend his order to forbid the use of planes by students also.

PLAY SHOWING LIFE OF HORACE MANN IS ANTIOCH OFFERING

Wearing authentic costumes, garments actually worn in the period described and furnished by the Antioch Alumni Association, "Horace Mann," a play in three acts and an epilogue in which college seniors and alumni participated, was presented as the annual senior class play on the east steps of the college at 9 o'clock Friday night following the alumni banquet.

The play, written by three members of last year's graduating class, Miss Dorothy Palmer, Miss Naomi Brackett and H. Lee Jones, was based on true incidents in the life of Horace Mann, the first president of Antioch, and will become an annual event at the college, although it will not be used as the class play every year.

Mrs. Charles W. Putnam directed the production which was witnessed by about 600 people seated on the campus on the east side of the building. This year is the seventy-fourth anniversary of the year in which Horace Mann became president of the college.

Scenes were announced by Charles Woodbridge, a senior.

The part of "Horace Mann" was splendidly portrayed by Professor Charles W. Putnam and was the central figure of the play depicting the tragedy in the life of the noted educator. The character of "Trumbull" was taken by Alfred Hansen, Homer C. Corry, Springfield attorney, president of the Antioch College Alumni Association took the role of the "Rev. Theodore Parker." Miss Cornelia Lunt took the part of Mrs. Mann.

One of the most interesting scenes depicted a visit to Antioch of Ralph Waldo Emerson, a close friend of Mann in the East, and a frequent Antioch visitor, played by Kendall Bassett.

Another interesting bit in the play was the appearance of Miss Hardy, member of one of the earliest classes, and of Miss Cora Hurst, who graduated when Mann was president. Three generations were thus presented in the persons of Miss Hurst, her niece, Mrs. R. O. Wead, and Miss Clara Hurst, and Robert Wead, the grand nephew of Miss Cosmella Hurst. Miss Hurst has furnished much material for the play.

Putnam, of the dramatic department, deserves great credit for his untiring efforts for the success of the play, as does Miss Clara Hurst, who accompanied on the plane.

Xenians participating in the play included: Dr. W. A. Gallowsay, Mrs. H. H. Eavey, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Aultman, Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Wead, Robert Wead, Miss Jean B. Elwell, Miss Dillencourt, Mrs. S. O. Hale, Miss Sarah Hagar, Mrs. Howard Little and Mrs. Dorothy Norton. Mr. and Mrs. Wolford, and daughter, Yellow Springs, also were in a pleasing little skit.

Mrs. W. A. Humphrey, Mrs. John Groves both of Yellow Springs, and Mrs. Little, Xenia, composed a committee that arranged for costumes.

An alumni casting committee, in charge of alumni "extras" for the play, was composed of Mrs. S. O. Hale, Xenia, and Miss Elsie Fogg, Yellow Springs. Miss Fogg is secretary of the association.

Louis Goldwyn-Mayer, Inc., Nicholas Schenck, Rubin, Louis B. Mayer, Mary Gish, Louis F. Levy and a number of other incorporations as well as Miss Gish. In his complaint Duell charges Miss Gish signed a contract to star in inspirational pictures from September 1, 1922, until January 1, 1930 but left the company in October, 1924, and signed a subsequent contract with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company.

Duell filed a suit in New York in 1925 to have the actress enjoined from making pictures, but it was dismissed in federal court and later Duell was indicted by the grand jury for perjury. The jury in the perjury case disagreed and the charges against the producer were dropped.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer officials said today no statement would be forthcoming until details of the suit could be learned.

BIBLE THOUGHT

GOD'S BENEFITS:—Blessed be the Lord, who daily beareth our burden. Even the God who is our salvation. Psalm 68:19.

GROWING UP MENTALLY

Chancellor Brown of New York university told his graduating class a few days ago that there is in this virile country a certain childish streak. He found such a tendency in the impatience of the age, in the demand for thrills, and in the dislike for self-restraint.

The American people will strongly deny that they are childish. Yet their most thoughtful observers will have to admit the existence of traits in which many grown up people act very much like children.

We all know young men who are anxious for quick results right off now. They do not like the idea of beginning at the bottom and working their way up by gradual industry. They want to accomplish results by sensational stunts, or daring speculations. They cherish wild schemes of how they can get rich right off quick.

Then we know all about the demand for thrills. How many of us can be content to drive automobiles at a moderate rate, but we must tear through the streets as if we were running to a fire. How we demand plays and films and stories of sensational character, far removed from the experiences of ordinary life. How the simpler pleasures seem dull and prosaic.

Then we know all about the dislike of self-restraint, and how children dislike to obey parental commands, and how many adults rebel at the laws of the state. All these manifestations are very like the ways of children, who find difficulty in adjusting themselves to those orderly and disciplined methods by which society makes progress.

Childishness is overcome by thought and observation of life. The people who read good newspapers, magazines and books, learn the real facts about life, and how poorly childish ideas work out in practice. Those who have developed the reading habit should know too much about actual affairs to be influenced by childish reasoning.

READY TO PLEASE VOTERS

The rapid reduction of the national debt keeps raising the question what can be done to improve the financial results of states, cities and towns, and get their debts and taxes down?

One thing that would help a lot, would be if the ordinary run of people would take more interest in their state and local affairs. If the people were discussing these affairs wherever they meet, and debating how taxes could be reduced and the service of public departments improved, if legislators and councilmen were constantly being asked about these results, the result would be to promote economical and efficient government.

The people get as good a government as they demand. If they neglect public affairs, public work will often be done in a wasteful way. If they take an interest in these affairs, they get improved results here in Ohio and everywhere else.

The Way of the World

PLOUGHING NIGHT AND DAY

Illinois farmers—some of them—have equipped their tractors with spot lights and are ploughing all night. Heavy rains have delayed planting nearly a month. There is tireless effort to put the ground in condition. Don't worry about the farmer's boy moving to the big city. There is more farm production than ever. That is the contribution of machinery to farm labor. And machinery is the contribution of science to this amazing industrial civilization.

NOT GOING TO THE DOGS

So say the Bishop of London, back home after giving the United States the once-over. The bishop speaks well. Never has there been more doubt in the business of theology. Perhaps there has never been more unbelief or more discouragement. But never before have there been so many people willing to bear the pain of thinking or trying to think. So long as we are TRYING TO GET SOMEWHERE, there is human progress, whether we go fast or slow.

HUMAN HURTS

Speaking of thinking, it's a hard process. Few can stand it. Few even try. George Barton Cutton, president of Colgate university, tells us not to worry because people don't think very much. It's the newest and the most difficult of the arts. Nobody can keep it up very long. It hurts. We have to be patient with everybody—including ourselves.

THE UNFLATTERING LAW OF AVERAGES

If you throw a coin into the air 100 times, the chances are that heads will turn up most of the time.

Thus, while we can't predict what one coin will do at one particular moment, we can tell with considerable accuracy what a large number of coins will do. This is made possible through the law of averages.

Now, this law of averages applies almost as well to human beings as to coins. If each of us did his own thinking, this would be a very possible, but since most of us just follow the crowd, our future behavior is easily predicted by any one who knows what we have done in the past.

Insurance companies know, with canny accuracy, just about how many men will overeat, or fail to take enough exercise, and die sooner than necessary. Likewise, they know how many will die from not eating enough.

In the restaurant of a famous department store in an eastern city, the manager knows exactly how much food of each kind to prepare, because he has figures at hand to show the averages in the past. He knows from previous experience how many people are likely to eat luncheon in the store restaurant on a certain day of the week at a certain season of the year. And he knows that only one person out of every hundred will order shellfish. A trifle more than one out of every five is reasonably sure to desire some kind of salad. Here are the percentages of customers that order various other items:

Soups	1.7
Fish	5.2
Boiled meats	2.0
Entrees (made dishes)	5.0
Roasts	6.0
Vegetables	7.4

MAKING MODERN MENUS

Mrs. Jones—"If there are any prizes being offered for the most unique recipe on record, I claim the reward."

Mrs. Brown—"What have you discovered now?"

Mrs. Jones—"This, a recipe for ginger ale salad, and I'll bet it's worth trying, too."

GINGER ALE SALAD

Two tablespoons gelatin, half cup water, one cup boiling water and a half cups ginger ale, half cup sugar, juice of one lemon, two cups fruit, cut fine, half cup nuts, chopped.

Soften gelatin cold water five minutes, dissolve in boiling water. Add ginger ale, lemon juice and sugar. Set aside to cool. When beginning to thicken, add fruit and turn into fancy molds. Serve on lettuce and garnish with dressing.

How to Achieve Beauty

Today, in concluding my series of articles on ways and means of safeguarding your complexion in summer from the deteriorating effects of sun and wind, I want to say a few words on the character of the make-up you should adopt at this season.

You should be careful to consider your environment in summer when applying your make-up and remember that instead of soft hangings, shaded lights and velvety carpets, you have to fit into the unadorned breadth of summer beaches, the broad expanse of green fields and long, white motor roads. One must also remember that the light, transparent fabrics and the dainty colorings of summer clothes demand the complement of a natural complexion, and not one that distinctly shows an extreme style of make-up.

Therefore, during the summer season you should adopt the darker shades of powder because they give a more natural effect. If necessary, blend two or three different shades of powder until you strike a color that blends with the natural coloring of the skin.

Your rouges, for both lips and cheeks, should also be more subtle, not as bright as during the social season. In other words, the whole effect should be toned down so as to correspond with the lightness, gaiety and natural beauty of the outdoors, where so much of one's time is spent.

And of course before applying one's summer make-up, considerable thought should be given to the cleansing of the skin, as well as the bracing and toning and the application of the right sort of a foundation cream. This will depend on the particular type of one's skin, as well as the extent to which the face, neck and arms will be exposed to the sun.

Therefore, during the summer season you should adopt the darker shades of powder because they give a more natural effect. If necessary, blend two or three different shades of powder until you strike a color that blends with the natural coloring of the skin.

SIGNIFICANT SAYINGS OF THE DAY

"No one who is acquainted with history who observes what is all about us, can fail to cherish the hope that we are entering on a wonderful future. It has been said that the war was fought to make the world a more fit for heroes. I want to see our own country the first to make that expectation a reality."—President Coolidge.

"If there were need of it between the two great democracies (France and the United States), in order to give high testimony of their desire for peace and to furnish a solemn example to other people, France would be willing to enter into an agreement with America mutually outlawing war."—Mr. Briand, French foreign minister.

Keeping HEALTHY

By Dr. A.F. Currier

LEUKOPLAKIA

Occasionally people have written to me and asked the meaning of white patches or sores appearing upon the tongue and giving them much discomfort.

Now there are several diseases which have these sores on the tongue as one of their symptoms, tuberculosis, syphilis, the so-called cancerous disease which comes so often with certain forms of indigestion, sprue, psoriasis, shingles, etc. They all look so much alike that it is often difficult to distinguish one from another.

The sores which I refer to are white, rounded or irregular patches but slightly elevated above the surface which appear for a while, then disappear, and then appear again. They may be in all parts of the mouth, but are particularly noticeable on the top of the tongue.

I have never happened to see but one real case of this kind and that was in the mouth of an eminent physician giving him much trouble and annoyance for years before his death. These sores may be quite painful even when not irritated by acids, salt, etc., but their chief importance consists in the fact that they may be the precursors of cancer of the tongue. It is therefore very important that they should not be neglected. They are produced by prolonged irritation of one kind and another, the irritation from the constant use of tobacco, clay pipes, particularly when they are rough and dirty, irregular and jagged teeth, ill-fitting teeth plates, and many other sources of irritation which may be in the mouth.

The thing to do is to try and get rid of them when they first appear, and remove the cause which has produced them. A strong solution of iodine or potassium permanganate, frequently applied, is said to be effective in removing them, also an ointment of salicylic acid of moderate strength, or an application of X-rays. I have not observed any recommendation of the use of carbonic acid snow, but should think it would be worthy of a trial, and do not see how it could do any harm. The tendency to develop into cancer is the principal thing which is to be feared and which gives the sores their great importance. They should therefore be dealt with promptly and thoroughly when they first make their appearance.

F. A. B.—Have a sharp pain under the left shoulder blade all the time, and am unable to find anybody who knows what causes it. What is the cause and what will cure it?

Answer.—Isn't this rather too much of a conundrum? I assume that you have been examined by doctors, who were unable to find the cause, even after inspection and examination. How can I do anything but guess what the trouble may be without seeing you or knowing anything of the history of the case? However, let me guess muscular rheumatism, and suggest that you try the use of salicylate of soda in five-grain doses after each meal. I don't think it will do you any harm, and it may possibly give you relief.

C. F. M.—Am 37, my tongue is constantly covered with a yellow coating, my breath is offensive and I have had a succession of boils during the winter. Please tell me what might improve my condition. My appetite appears to be good.

Answer.—Perhaps you are eating too much, and it is quite certain that you are eating what does not digest properly. Take castor oil every night before retiring, and drink a glass of hot water very slowly before each meal. Also let your diet consist chiefly of fruit and vegetables for a few weeks.

Little Old New York

NEW YORK, June 25.—I met a woman yesterday who is a successful writer of western stories. She lives in the east Forties. She is a native of Boston and a graduate of an eastern college. When I asked her how she gathered material for her tales of cowboys and the plains, she told me that she had once made a trip to the Pacific coast on the Overland limited. Perhaps that explains why her fiction is successful. If she knew cowboys as they really are, she would never be able to amek them so romantic and glamorous.

A cowboy leads as monotonous a life as any officer in the northwest frontier police, a service that has also been romanticized out of all reason.

Not so long ago I was on a visit to the state in which I grew up as a youth, Oklahoma. I knew a lot of cowboys in my early days. Few of them ever owned a pair of chaps, and those who did never wore them at work, but kept them to show off in at county fairs. They wore boots and blue-jeans and flannel shirts, bought from a mail order house.

When I was down in Oklahoma the last time, the movies had made the cowhands self-conscious. Most of the grazing lands had been either divided up into farms or staked out as oil leases. There were not any cowboys, really, but farm hands. But most of them had bought sordid and chaps from Montgomery Ward.

They dress up on Saturday nights with their salaries in their pockets, take the ropes off the well buckets and coil them around their saddle horns, drink a pint or so of white mule, ride into town and see a movie, and ride back along the country roads licket-split—yelling, "Whoopie! I'm a hell-cat and this is my night to howl! Whoopie!" and imagine they are just like Tom Mix.

When they get home, drunk or sober, they have to take the "lariat" off their saddle horns and put them back on the well buckets.

While I was down there my dad told me one night that a former "bad man" was coming to dinner. This fellow, my dad said, was one of the best shots in Oklahoma. He could drive a nail into a tree with his six-shooter at twenty yards. He had killed men in old fights and all the men he had killed had been quick on the trigger.

I expected to see a ferocious-looking buccaneer, with a terrible bow.

THE QUESTIONS ON

1. Bernt Balchen, twenty-eight years old, a former flight lieutenant in the Norwegian navy, is the fourth member of the trans-Atlantic personnel has been officially announced by Commander Richard E. Byrd.

2. The Supreme Court today refused writs of habeas corpus for Robert and Byron Dunn, condemned for the murder of Deputy Sheriff Sam Duhon of Calcasieu Parish.

The whole affair, however, sinks into nothingness because America enters the World War.

Phil is one of the first to enlist.

Just before leaving France, Phil met Natlee again and they plan to be married. The immediate departure of the troops, however, prevents this. Phil's regiment is sent to the front soon after arriving in France.
He is wounded, receiving the croix de guerre.

After the armistice Phil is awarded a scholarship in a French university, and while in Paris he comes face to face with his mother, who has come to France to hunt him.

Major Aukland, who is devoted to Anne Tracy, accompanies her.

In talking to her, Mrs. Tracy learns that Phil intends to marry Pat, a rich French divorcee. She refuses to give her consent to the marriage.

Phil compromises with his mother.

If she will refuse Major Aukland's proposal of marriage, he will give up Pat for two years. She agrees and Phil goes to tell Pat. She instinctively knows something is wrong and tells him they will never marry.

Here the story further unfolds—

CHAPTER LI

OFF TO AMERICA

FOR the next few days Phil's nerves, as well as his mother's, were rather shaky. Phil was all the time thinking that Pat would either telegraph or telephone. With a man's usual egotism, he could not think that she would let him go without at least one more good-bye.

However, at the end of the week

she saw in one of the Paris papers that Major Aukland had come to Turkey with the Near East expedition, and a friend told Phil one evening that he had seen Pat leaving the station for Switzerland, consequently they both became calmer, if not happier.

Neither mother nor son referred in any way to the absence of Pat or John Aukland in their conversation, when they were perhaps more in each other's thoughts all the time than any one or anything else.

Phil had to leave Paris for two or three days to go and get his discharge papers. During that time his mother finished up the shopping and so kept herself too busy to think much about anything.

All the time, however, she kept asking herself if there had made a mistake, for Anne Tracy had come to see that her interference between Phil and Natlee had been a great error of judgment.

SHE felt better when on the Fourth of July they stood on the Rue de Rivoli and cheered the American troops as they marched up that historical street, escorted by the crack regiments of England, Belgium, Italy, Canada and Australia.

Phil lifted his mother high in the air and said, with more pride and enthusiasm than she had heard him express since she had met him abroad: "We're proud we're Americans, aren't we, young lady, and we're glad we're going home."

"Yes, Phil, I shall be so glad to get home that it seems to me now I shall never want to go away again.

Oh, I have so many plans for both of us."

"Don't talk of plans, Mother. They make me miserable. What can you plan for such a poor stick as I am?"

Anne Huntington Tracy looked at her boy. He was thin and she saw lines on his face that ought not to have been there until he was at least 30, and the tears came to her eyes.
Would he ever get back his youthful spirits again?

It was not until the 14th of August that mother and son found themselves at Le Havre, embarking for America. They were both of them leaving many happy days and many very terrible days behind, but after all, that is only what makes up life.

Just as the boat edged out from the pier, Mrs. Tracy felt her arm clutched by her son. She raised her eyes to his face. He was not looking at her. He was looking over the crowd on the dock. Following his gaze, she saw Pat's face turned up to Pat's eyes were very sad and the tears were streaming down her cheeks.

Phil took off his hat and bowed formally. His mother thought he seemed almost glad that the parting was just as it was. Neither mother nor son mentioned it to the other afterward. The episode was apparently closed.

Phil was a little ashamed, for since that afternoon on the Bois he had never tried to see Pat again. He had not even written to tell her when he was sailing. His mother was perfectly willing, now they were leaving France, not to mention Phil's French sweetheart's name to him.

He noticed, as he saw her on the

He noticed, as he saw her on the free of counterfeiting. In all other lands, until quite recently, prosecution of counterfeiting has remained a purely police affair. One or two countries now have special anti-counterfeiting agencies.

American interest in international measures for suppression of counterfeiting is mainly due to the fact that today more United States currency is in circulation abroad than that of any other government. This is due to two major causes. The enormous number of aliens and citizens of alien extraction in this country is responsible for the sending to relatives and friends abroad of immense quantities of American money.

The sum total runs into tens of millions of dollars a year. The habit of mailing United States cash to foreign countries has increased with the rising value of the dollar overseas. The result of the widespread circulation of our treasury and bank notes "over there" has been a growing flood of counterfeit American currency.

This writer has just seen some amazing evidence of the skill with which European money-fakers are tampering with United States money. They have taken the $10 gold treasury certificate, bearing the medallion portrait of Michael Hillegas, and "raised" it to a $500

note of so authentic an appearance in every detail that none but a highly-trained American expert could detect the fraud. Both figures and lettering have been successfully altered. It is regarded doubtful by Washington authorities whether anybody outside of the United States could see that the "raise" had been made. The average European railroad or steamship office, bank, hotel or shop, accustomed to doing business with American tourists on larger scales, would in all probability take the faked $500 treasury certificate without hesitation. It is only when the counterfeit money finds its way back to this country that the counterfeit is caught.

Most of the countries invited to put their heads together at Geneva have expressed themselves in favor of some co-ordinated form of collaboration to suppress international traffic in counterfeit money. Belgium suggests that any system eventually devised ought to include schemes for controlling frauds in public securities, bills of exchange and passports. Italy has been a hot-bed of counterfeiting, but it is one of the crimes with which Mussolini has come ruthlessly to grips. In the Roman dictator's sensational speech before the Chamber of Deputies on May 26, he told in detail of the successful warfare which the Fascist police are waging upon forgers and counterfeiters.

What the United States, of course, would like to see brought about is a uniform system in foreign countries for the prosecution of criminals who counterfeit Amer

FUN FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY

The Rovin' Ritzies

By Flo Frederick

Marty says it isn't right

To give them such a fright! "What in the world could have happened to the twins?" Marty asked himself this over and over again as he hurried along through the woods with Patsy on one side and Betty Ann on the other.

It had been Patsy who had first noticed that the twins had disappeared. They were all attending the Methodist Sunday school picnic and taking part in all kinds of games and stunts and so it wasn't until late in the afternoon that the absence of the twins had been noticed.

"I guess they felt sort of like strangers and just wandered off some place," suggested Marty, trying to lighten the worries of the girls. The twins weren't members of the Methodist Sunday school, but had been invited by their Ritzie friends and so, of course, they weren't so well acquainted with this group of boys and girls.

"Why, Tag was the one that suggested the picnic," said Patsy. "He didn't seem very timid, then. You know, Marty as well as I, that the twins never have any trouble getting acquainted."

Marty had to admit that she was right. There was no doubt

this seemed worse than anything that had ever happened before.

"What is that?" asked Patsy, as she pointed to a bit of cloth tied to a tree, a yard or so from the beaten path.

"It's a signal all right," said Marty, as he examined the bit of cloth. "And it's recently been tied because it's not a bit dirty. We're on the trail but what it's all about I can't imagine."

Bits of cloth were found at regular intervals from then on and the three Ritzies eagerly followed the zig-zag trail that they made. At length they came to a steep cliff and here the trail seemed to disappear altogether. They followed the cliff, hoping to come to another signal, but instead suddenly found themselves at the mouth of a small cave.

They had summoned up courage to peer into the cave and Marty had taken a step forward when out jumped Rag from the darkness of the cave, giving them such a fright that all three were knocked speechless.

Rag, who at first seemed to think about it, something had happened to the twins and the more he thought about the stories he had heard about the old mill being haunted, the more frightened he became.

They had come to a narrow path which seemed to have been recently traveled and they followed it like bloodhounds on the scent. All of a sudden Marty stopped with a cry of delight. On a nearby tree, a freshly carved letter R stood out as clearly as could be.

The three Ritzies viewed this new discovery with surprise and wonder. Patsy was inclined to think that the twins were up to some kind of a trick, perhaps blazing a Ritzie trail or something of the kind. Marty, who couldn't keep his mind off the fact that the old mill was haunted, couldn't help but think that the twins were in danger.

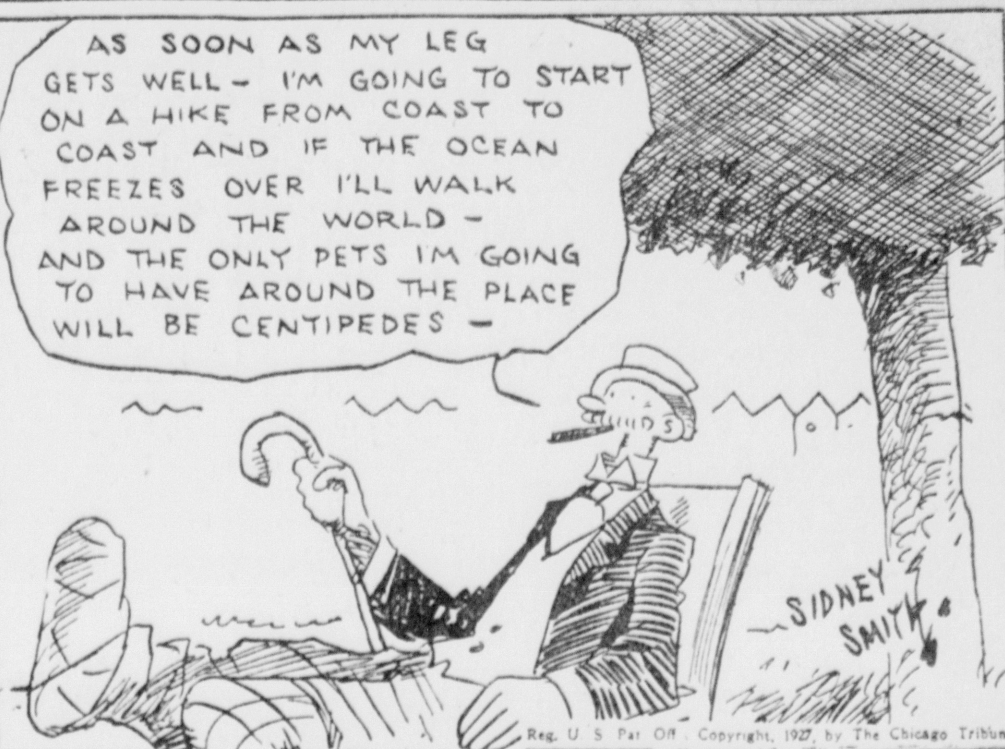

Betty Ann, wide-eyed with fright, was too upset to offer a suggestion. The twins were always scaring her with their antics and it quite a joke, suddenly became more serious as he asked a most unexpected question. "Have you seen Tag?"

"Why, no," answered Marty. "Isn't he here? We thought you were together."

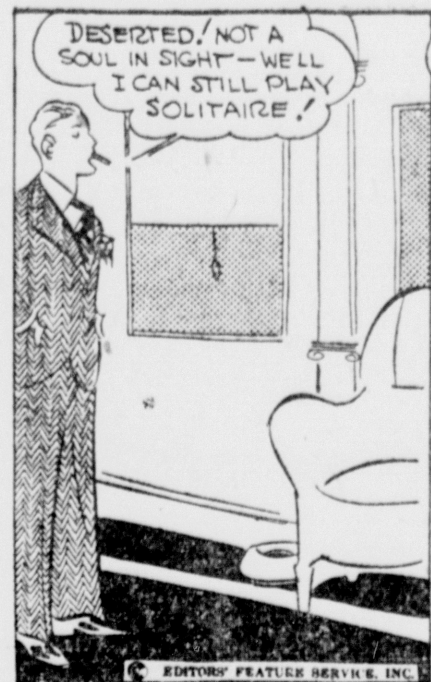

Rag looked quite worried at this and hurried on to explain. "You see it was like this. Tag and I got tired of playing those ring games and running potato races and so we started off through the woods. I got to thinking about trails and made a bet that Tag couldn't follow a trail of mine. He took me up on it and gave me a 15-minute start. I made what I thought was a pretty easy trail and have been waiting for him in this cave. I was beginning to be worried just before you folks arrived, for it has been almost an hour." Rag's explanation didn't calm the fears of Marty and the girls. That only one of the twins had been found only added to the mystery of the thing. What had happened to Tag and why couldn't he follow the trail?

The school board received many applications for the position of successor to Principal Shank but the ultimate election of Mr. Hammerle was a unanimous one.

CHEVROLET ADDS TO PLANT FACILITIES

With production running at the record clip of more than 5,000 units daily and demand for the product constantly attaining new levels, the Chevrolet Motor Company, today, announces a $2,000,000 development of its properties at Flint, Mich., to relieve congestion brought about by steady increases in production.

This will include two buildings, a three-story office building and a new parts building. The new buildings will be completed Oct. 1, according to Charles F. Barth, vice president in charge of manufacturing.

On the completion of the new buildings, the present office and parts buildings will be razed and a modern factory building erected in their place, Mr. Barth declared.

The new parts building will be a three-story structure, 530 by 122 ft., and of concrete construction. The new office building of brick and concrete construction, will be 260 by 60 ft.

CHRYSLER FAVORED BY PIONEER MAKER

Twenty-nine years ago Alexander Winton, who became famous later as a manufacturer of fine cars, shipped the first automobile sold in America from his modest little factory in Cleveland, Ohio. Except motor and chassis, it lacked practically everything the modern motor car possesses.

Yet it was No. 1 of 35,000,000 or more motor vehicles that have been made since and sold to people in every walk of life.

Just a few days ago, Alexander Winton, still hale, hearty and recently remarried, and still actively interested in the automotive industry, bought himself an automobile.

Walter F. Wright, distributor of Chryslers in the Cleveland territory, rather proudly revealed the fact with Winton's permission.

Winton, called by some the father of the automobile industry and for years head of a concern that manufactured a high class motor car bearing his name, chose his new car from among four Chrysler models. His selection was one of the new Imperial "80" four-passenger coupes, a luxurious personal car.

OLDSMOBILE CUTS PRICES ON MODELS

The American public appreciates exceptional value in automobiles. This is proven by the reception accorded the announcement last week that Oldsmobile had reduced prices and added to equipment, thus passing on to the consumer those savings which have been made possible by new and improved methods of production.

Reports from all sections of the country, factory officials state, reflect a widespread and increasing demand for Oldsmobiles. The reaction of the public to the new low prices is taken as a clear indication that the motoring public is not only cognizant of automobile value but is seeking it today as never before.

The reductions made by Oldsmobile average approximately $100

for all models, although in individual cases the drop in price is as much as $115. The price range is from $875 for the two-door sedan with front and rear bumpers to $1075 for deluxe landau.
